Anglo-Iran Break May Be Delayed By U.S. Action
 TEHRAN, Sunday (UP). — The semi-official Bakhter Enghelab indicated today that U.S. intervention could delay the threatened diplomatic break with Britain and Iran.

The paper, published by Foreign Minister Hossein Fardoust, called attention to "rumors" that U.S. Ambassador Loy Henderson has urged Iran to postpone a formal break.

"These rumors gain weight if one considers that such a rupture is a vital question affecting Iran's relations with the western world which it is in America's interests to safeguard," the paper said, adding that the U.S. is exerting pressure on Britain to effect a compromise.

Another reason for the delay in the formal break, "Bakhter Enghelab" reported, was the study of a complaint to the U.N. by the Iranian Ambassador in Washington, Aliyeh Salahi, about "Britain's economic blockade of this country."

Patent himself has said meanwhile that he had asked the Iranian Charge d'Affaires in London to inform him how quickly the Iranian Embassy in London could be closed down.

Cabinet Launches New Economy Drive

Supernumeraries
 In connection with the Government's new economy drive to reduce expenditures, it was decided today that 1,000 supernumeraries will be dismissed from the public service.

The special three member committee is composed of representatives of the Ministries of Finance and the Interior and the Civil Service Commission.

The second committee is to study efficiency in Government offices, to eliminate duplications of work, and to study the possibility of abolishing unnecessary activities. The committee is to have authority to transfer activities, and even departments, from one Ministry to another, as well as to do away with superfluous offices.

The new Committee has been given powers to carry out its decisions, but matters of high importance will be referred back to Government.

THE NEW academic year of the Hebrew University is due to begin on November 4, and registration of old students and enrollment of new ones will have begun some days ago.

In obedience to a strike call, a few score students only have registered out of an expected enrollment of approximately 2,000. Fees were fixed in 1946 at LP 52 a year. It is now proposed to charge each student IL 80 with an additional IL 20 to be paid into a fund to assist needy students to meet the cost of tuition. The strike has been called against the increase.

On the figures alone it would appear that the agitation is without any foundation in equity, and there are other considerations which lead to the conclusion that the action of the students is quite ill-advised. Without taking into account the large number of scholarships available the present cost of University tuition is probably among the lowest in the world for any fee-paying university. The cost of living immediately comes to mind why there is this agitation in Jerusalem while at the Technion in Haifa the increased fees, at least 50 per cent higher, than those at the University, have been paid without question. One explanation is the peculiar character of the student body at Jerusalem. In Haifa the organization is on a faculty and professional basis while in Jerusalem it is a political line. The needs of medical students as such can have no relation to Mapai, Mizrachi or General Zionism. Nor are they the same as those of law or science students. Yet at Jerusalem all are jammed together indiscriminately and then neglected in the fog of partisan quarrels.

There are two parties at fault in allowing this situation to arise. One is the University itself which recognized a student body so organized and the other is the students themselves who are so blind to their academic and personal interests. There is almost a complete lack of esprit de corps among the students of whom at least more than a third are in a position to pay without working their passage. In most other universities such students take an interest in the student body and its problems as a whole. In Israel they seem to absent themselves entirely from all student meetings and concerns. There are left to needy students, with financial troubles pressing upon them and with many hours to devote to seeking a livelihood. Naturally these are driven into extreme and irrational attitudes.

Equally to blame are the various municipalities and public bodies in the country. Tel Aviv, for example, which has a thousand students to the University, does not provide even for one scholarship, and Jerusalem which has the honor of being the seat of this great institution is equally backward in meeting its moral obligations. A similar situation exists with regard to student housing. There is not a single institution or municipality in the State which does anything towards the urgent problem of student accommodation. Each student contributes IL 500 per annum towards providing himself and the University gives a similar amount. By this means nearly 500 dormitories have been made available at some IL 5 a month. But the great majority of students have to find accommodation in private homes where citizens of Jerusalem, many of whom while paying pre-war controlled rents, ask little from a University student for a bare room.

The University authorities have now to face the situation squarely. The students expect that even without excellent dormitories, which will begin an October 1, and they will stand and afterwards the discussion of fees can continue. It would be a mistake on the part of the University to allow this. The Senate should, in the first instance, refuse to open this year's admission. The student body should place in a regular manner. Secondly, they should help in the setting up of a proper body representative of the students. If the students wish to continue their political work during their University life, they should be given every encouragement, but as students in their own right, without hindering the atmosphere of the University as a seat of learning.

BANDITS' DAILY BUSINESS METHODS Burmese 'Gate Money'

By E. V. FOUCAR

FROM the bamboo thickets on the bank above the road, a band of Burmese watched the lone stretch of highway winding through the jungle and into the flat paddy lands beyond. He had a distant view of an un-baked, shingle-covered road, but his eyes were on a narrow strip of dirt above the road, the road.

Forcing through the jungle, the lone man watched the moving cloudlet of dust. The better to do so, he wiped the sweat from his eyes. Then, instinctively, he reached for the heavy gun beside him. From in the Burmese jungle a rebel goes more safely with a weapon in his hands. And he still had not decided upon the identity of that approaching vehicle.

Now he was certain of it. Now he saw his shoulder blades to his companions behind the dump of bamboo. "Wake up, all of you. A bus comes!"

Rebel Post
Grumbling at this interruption of their siesta the rebels roused themselves; one of them slid down the bank into the road. Then he took a rifle, slung across his shoulders, and immediately lit a cigarette.

He knew that at the sight of him the driver of the omnibus would halt. This rebel post was a recognized "gate" for all traffic along the main road. The vehicle came to a stop. The bandit on the road strode across to it, counted the passengers, examined the goods aboard, made his estimate of the toll to be paid, and demanded this of the driver.

The latter was ready with the money which he quickly handed over. Meanwhile, the rebel on the bank had freely criticized the fear-stricken passengers, commenting on the woman, but assuring them that they were safe from molestation. "You're far too valuable to us as travelers," cried one ruffian with a grin at the prettiest woman.

The driver, on the bank of terms with the robbers, gave them what information he had of troop movements. The company stationed at Tamwey has moved out along the railway. A train was wrecked last night at Thabin and the troops are chasing the rebels who did it.

As that break of Thabin is required we shall blow the line somewhere else." Struggling his shoulder, the driver groaned. "You fellows live too dangerously. Here is a small present for you." And he threw to the man in the road a bundle of charcoal and a couple of tin cans of cigarettes. "Goodbye! Look out for me tomorrow. I shall be going back to Tamwey with a load of tin cans and some passengers."

"All right. Have your money ready when you get here. And we shall expect to get some of these goods." The bandit in the road moved on and the bus drove on. The bandit in the road moved on and the bus drove on. The bandit in the road moved on and the bus drove on.

Typical Incident
This incident is typical of Burma today. Here for the Karen insurgents, many of the larger bodies of rebels have been broken up, although it still remains within their power to disrupt the economy of the country and to batter on the law-abiding members of the public.

The common technique is to control all the main lines of communication and to establish "gates" where tolls are exacted for the passage of goods or travelers.

This system works well in Burma, particularly nowadays when the main roads and waterways are generally deserted and only traversed by those compelled to make journeys. It is a return to the days of the Burmese kings when a traveler had to take his life in his hands when venturing far from his own home.

Railways Suffer
Of course, this explains the frequent and determined attacks upon the railways. Here the rebels cannot establish their gates. So the railways must not be allowed to function, and would-be passengers must be frightened off them. The rebel plan seems to be working well, and the incentive is a strong one. The easy collection of gate-money is a certain temptation to the criminal-minded members of Burma's population.

"The Nation," a leading Bangkok daily newspaper, reports that local inhabitants must be made responsible for the safety of railways, roads and waterways within their area, and that their failure to protect them should be punished.

NATURE NOTES Prickly Love

WITH the cacti it is as with cypresses — you love them passionately or you detest them — there is no middle way.

There are not a single cactus in the open. Mexican candleabra grow higher than houses and flower steadily for months, their snowy-white waterily-like blossoms inconspicuously perched on the thick stems. A friend had a hedgehog-cactus (Echinopsis viridula) with 22 huge pale lilac flowers open at the same time. The little house cornered by the cactus looks very small and cozy.

The enemies of the cacti have plenty to say, of course, about their ugliness and about their prickly thorns, which are indeed a nuisance, especially when the cactus is a hedgehog-cactus whose minute yellow barbs intrude themselves traitorously under your skin. But as there are many species with good, large, visible thorns, and others without any at all, you can still be a cactus lover, enjoying their marvellous exotic blossoms and their practically eternal life.

All Work, No Study Makes Dull Tour

"I'm staying at a kibbutz," a young English movie photographer told me. "No, I don't intend to become a member. I'm just hired help." He was a member of the third group of kibbutz, a voluntary worker from a Western Democracy who is serving his year in Israel at Tel Yitzhak where he works in fodder for six days a week and studies a little Hebrew, but is almost as ignorant of the country and the language as he was when he arrived in Israel five months ago.

I went with him to his kibbutz where I found 15 young people from England and Denmark. None knew any Hebrew upon their arrival here, having in fact had little or no Zionist or Jewish background. These, as promoted by Hanser Haisler, is to have people pay their fare here and after short hachshara in France, work in a kibbutz and study Hebrew for a year or two, after which their fare back is guaranteed. The present group, while rich in the kibbutz, was not carefully selected as to fitness for the scheme. They simply answered a high-pressure call in London and Copenhagen to the tune of "Israel Wants YOU!" with the unadvised pointing finger.

Admitted that time literally flies, the majority feel that they have not really started to do what they came for. "We've done our year's work, how about the year's study?" asked one of the boys. "They should never have sent us here, but now that we are in this place we want a leader, regular lessons, and an educational programme," they said almost in unison.

Kibbutz Attitude
Now after five months, Tel Yitzhak has decided to start an absorption committee to see what can be done for the group. The Secretary of the kibbutz, queried about the complaints, said, "We know the girls would rather work in the fields but we have no one to do the domestic chores; our own women aren't enough."

As for their Hebrew, he thought all were doing "remarkably well" and attributed some strikingly slow cases to lack of language ability. Even though all these people are at least bilingual, he was quick, though, to laud the "human material" of the group, having had an unfortunate experience with some immigrants from North Africa.

Asked about the possibility of one of the boys, a reliable worker in fodder, leaving the kibbutz, his foreman said, "He won't leave. I'll find him a wife; he has a roof and three square meals — what else would he need?" But the fellow will go, as will the others, for having spent a short holiday in towns and other settlements recently, they find nothing to keep them at Tel Yitzhak — certainly not their IL 3 a month pay.

PHILIP FINKELSTEIN
The words of this covenant are most aptly said. They are in your mouths and hearts that you may do them and you will all answer — AMEN! AMEN, as will we do.

Men and Things

If modern preoccupation with the idea of eternal youth is anything to go by, then we ought not to laugh at the medieval people who sought, either by discovering the philosopher's stone or by compact with the devil, to have endless life on earth. It might be thought that the philosophical questions opened up by discussion of eternal youth might deter people from seeking it. What fun could there be in making one's ambition and achievement a quest against inexorable Time? — the height of human ambition would become procrastination, a universal "bukra fil mishlakh". Then what a test for marriage it would be, to be eternally locked to the same spouse! How tepid-hurry to address a man as old as oneself as "son"!

And the form-fillers! How could they possibly assess the ages of false faces? How, how? The wrinkles on the face of the extra perquisites of youth? All in all, chaos seems to be the likeliest concomitant of everlasting youth. But stay! Perhaps in totalitarian countries one could stifle subversive thought by preventing human development from youth to age; perhaps even counter-revolution could be staved off indefinitely by circulating hard-working subjects with monkey-glands, as making them fit for nothing but manual labour, man-work, and reproduction. So may the State be everlastingly propped up, if there is any truth in the South Korean Radio's story that thirty Georgian farmers closely resembling Mr. Stalin are being experimented on (fatally, some of them) to see if they can be rejuvenated. Readers' Letters OATH FOR ISRAEL DOCTORS

To the Editor of THE POST
Sir, — We, in the Golan, were thrilled to read of the first graduation exercises at the Medical School of the Hebrew University. The local Anglo-Jewish press reported that "for the first time in the history of man the Hippocratic Oath was recited in Hebrew when the first class of doctors received their degrees from the Hebrew University — Ha-dashah Medical School in Jerusalem." It occurred to us that the "Trayer for Physicians" by Moshe Maimonides would be a most fitting selection to include at such exercises. I do not know that it could necessarily replace the Hippocratic Oath because there exists perhaps an International Medical regulation concerning the Maimonides' Prayer reads as follows:

"O God, thou hast formed the body of man with infinite goodness; Thou hast ended in him immense forces incessantly at work like so many instruments, so as to preserve in its entirety this immortal soul, and these forces act with all the order, concord, and harmony imaginable. But if weakness or violent passion disturb this harmony, these forces act against one another, and the soul returns to the dust whence it came. Thou sendest them to man Thy messengers, the diseases which announce the approach of danger, and bid him prepare to overcome them. The Eternal Providence has ordered that light on what the soul and health of Thy creatures. May the love of my art actuate me at all times, may neither covetous nor miserliness, nor the thirst for glory or a great reputation engage my mind; for, enemies of truth and of the health of my fellow men, let me make me forgetful of my lofty aim of doing good to Thy children. of her whether she was English. No, she was an Israeli, but had come from South Africa. As an afterthought she said, "But you are an English too, where do you come from?" "Well," said the other woman, "I was born in Russia and my family emigrated to the States. I studied to be a nurse, and then I married and came here as a domestic servant. I am now a nurse. I am Mrs. Ben Gurion," said her acquaintance.

Ten Principles
To the Editor of THE POST
Sir, — Maimonides' "Trayer for Physicians" has been known to us, but we are all the same grateful to Rabbi Chai for having written in the matter, since this gives us an opportunity of correcting a misunderstanding. The oath that was recited in Hebrew when our first class of graduates received their doctor's degree this year, is not the Hippocratic Oath. A special committee of our Medical Faculty which had prepared the graduation ceremony had come to the conclusion that the ancient formulae are no longer in keeping with the spirit of the new generation of physicians. The committee, therefore, decided that a new oath, along the lines as laid down by the World Health Organization, be adapted to our needs. Prof. L. Halpern, head of our Department of Neurology, formulated the new oath in Hebrew, of which we give you hereunder an English translation (which has been prepared jointly by Dr. and Mrs. Eli Davis and Prof. and Mrs. L. Halpern).

New Men of Medicine in Israel
Ye stand this day all of you before your masters in the ways of medicine and its studies.

That you should enter into covenant with medicine, to follow its laws with uprightness,

And with all your might and mind, so that both may be ready to serve the rich and the poor, the good and the wicked, friend and enemy, and that I may never see in the patient anything else but a fellow brother in pain.

"If physicians more learned than I with counsel me, inspire me with confidence in and obedience towards the recognition of them, for the study of the science is great. It is not given to one alone to see all that others see. May I be devoted to everything except in the knowledge of this science; so far as it is concerned, may I be insatiable; grant me the strength and opportunity always to correct what I have acquired, always to extend my knowledge for knowledge is boundless and the spirit of man can also extend infinitely, daily to enrich itself with new acquisitions. Today he can discover his errors of yesterday, and tomorrow he may obtain new light on what he thinks himself sure of today.

And you shall seek to fathom the soul of the sick, to restore his spirit, through understanding and compassion.

Do not hasten to bring forth judgment, and weigh your advice on a wise balance, tried in the crucible of experience.

Be true to him who puts his trust in you. Reveal not his secret and go not about as a talebearer.

And make wise your heart to the well-being of the many, to bring healing for the ailments of the people.
